The Ralls Collection Premieres Trojan War Years, Paintings by David Richardson

Washington, DC (August 31, 2010) – This fall, the Ralls Collection will premier Trojan War Years, the first of three series of paintings by local artist David Richardson, from October 6th through December 31st, 2010. There will be a private reception with the artist on Wednesday, October 6th, 2010 from 6:00 – 8:00PM at the gallery.

The paintings featured in Trojan War Years will display Richardson's ability to convey a strong narrative of Homer's epic tale in conjunction with his unique flair for color and exceptional conviction for abstract forms.

In the last decade, Richardson has painted three important series of works. The first, Trojan War Years, not only precedes the others, but it also continues to manifest. The impetus for the series came while Richardson lived in Japan. Wandering around Tokyo, Richardson noticed the Kanji inscriptions that the Japanese used to mark temples, civic buildings, and businesses. Fueled by his interest in the way Kanji weaved into the architecture of Tokyo in addition to his passion for Homer's recollection of the Trojan War, Richardson began incorporating the symbols into his own art, eventually securing the foundation for Trojan War Years series.
